BRUNING AND POISON

SENSATIONAL CHARGES MADE BY COPELAND'S ATTORNEY.

Alleged that the Prosecuting Witness Attempted to Take His Sister's

Startling disclosures are promised by the defense in the William Copeland case, Yesterday the proceedings reached the theatrical stage, and for more than an hour the atmosphere of the Criminal Court seemed surchaged with sensationalism. The climax came with the opening remarks of attorney Henry Spaan in the afternoon. At 3 o'clock the prosecution closed its case and the attorneys for Copeland decided that Mr. Spaan should state the case to the jury. He openly charged Bruning with having attempted to poison his sister, Mrs. Copeland. He declared that Bruning dishonored her when she was a child and robbed her of her heritage when she grew to womanhood. All these charges would, he said, be supported by the testimony of

During the latter part of Mr. Spaan's scathing arraignment of Bruning Copeland grew agitated. He made no attempt to conceal his emotion. His great frame trembled and shook and the tears ran down his cheeks like tiny rivulets. Mrs. Copeland saw the pitiable condition of her hus-band and bore up courageously. She left her place at the side of attorney Harding and went over to her husband. Seating herself on the arm of his chair she placed her arms closely about his neck and pressed his face to her cheek. They sat that way until the attorney closed at 5:30

Mr. Spaan passed briefly over the life of his client until he reached manhood. He told the jury of Copeland's struggles to attain an education and his early election to the legislative halls of the State. "Why, gentlemen of the jury," he said, this man was elected a member of the General Assembly at twenty-two years of age. This was in 1883, and in 1885 he the defense will put their first witness on had served the State so well that he was sent back. When not in the Legislature he was practicing law, his chosen profession. The man who sits at the bar a prisoner is not a criminal. We will bring men here to show that he has a record that any of us could be proud of. We will show you that he has been all the years of his life until the happening of this unfortunate accident a man of correct habits-a polite gentlemen. We will show you that he has been everything that makes a man's life worth living; we will bring judges, lawyers, doctors, leading citizens from every walk of life, who will prove to you that his life has been irreproachable. While my client was in the Legislature in 1885, or perhaps a little before, he met the woman who now sits by his side as his wife; he courted her; they loved each other and were married. It has been said in this case that he married this woman to feather his own nestbecause she had money, but we will show you that the assertion is false. We will prove that they loved each other and were united in the holy bonds of wedlock because of that love. Gentlemen, they sit side by side to-day, with the same love that moved their hearts on the day they were made man and wife. Our information will show that the trouble that came to this young couple came from the man who is the prosecuting witness in this case; that every heartache and every line of care in this poor woman's face were put there by the invidious Uriah Heep-the brother, who is the State's own witness. We will show to you that the man who is engineering the prosecution is the man who is bitterly and deeply interested in having my client sent to the penitentiary." The attorney went over the latter days of Mrs. Copeland's father's life, telling of the partnership in which the younger Bruning became interested in 1867. Then he was but twenty-two years of age, and his sister was nine. Father and son purchased property and had it put in the daughter's name. The father did this in order that his youngest child might have a dower of her own when she married. After explaining how this property after-ward got into the hands of the prosecuting

"We will show you, gentlemen of the jury, letters from that good mother, long since dead, that will refute the slanderous statements of this brother, the prosecuting witness. They have not proved that this marriage was protested. On the contrary, we will show that the marriage bells rang merrily over the hearthstone of that same house where this girl was born. We will show you how that (pointing to Bruning) man went out to the State of Iowa, got this poor girl into a room alone, and threatened that if she did not sign a deed to this Evansville property, and married Copeland, she would be a widow in a few days after her marriage. The poor mother and the sister were afraid of him. He was a man of iron will and they feared he would put into execution that threat. Oh, we'll strip the mask from this man who got on to the witness stand with that look of holiness on his face. They have produced letters here purporting to have been written by Bruning's mother. We will show you that they were rank forgeries, and why they are. A threat was made out in Iowa against Copeland, and it has been held over this poor woman until this day. Two years before old man Bruning's Old Suit Against the City Dismissed. death the partnership between himself and son was dissolved, and the latter took charge of the business. That dissolution was kept a profound secret until Mrs. Copeland, believing there was something coming to her from the business, demanded a

"Her father died in 1891 and she did not know that he had left a will until 1893, when Bruning came back from New York and filed it. He told his sister that there was nothing left but real estate and then she confessed to him that she was $8,000 in debt and that her father had gone on her notes for this amount. Bruning arranged to continue these notes and that's what Mr. Duncan calls charity. May God's profound mercy save us from such charity all our lives. We will show you that this man is the smoothest villain that ever went unhung. The sister went to New York with Bruning to adjust their business affairs. He took her to a room and compelled her to associate day after day with a notorious woman with whom he had been living in open shame. He tried to get her to leave her husband and used every artifice in his power to get her to throw him off. We will show you that when he found that nothing would influence her mind against Copeland he attempted to poison her. On the very day that she left New York he told her that he would find some way to put her husband out of the way. She came back home suffering with all the indications of arsenical poison. Then she told her husband all about this man except one instance. A physician was called in and Copeland was informed that an attempt had been made to poison his wife. Later she told him of the whole dastardly business. Copeland was now beginning to realize what kind of a "The next step in this tragedy was when lawyer Allison, of Madison, wrote to Bruning and told him that he had repeatedly robbed his client's wife. Bruning did not transact his business through a lawyer, but wrote to his sister that he would visit her. When he reached Madison he found the door of his sister's home locked. She had seen him coming and with fear of death on her she locked herself in her room. She was there cowering in mortal fear when Bruning looked over the transom at her. I imagine I can see that Uriah Heep face now. She said: 'If you come in here I'll shoot myself.' Some one told Copeland that his brother-in-law was in town and he went home. He did order Bruning off the place and told him that he had robbed his sister. "In 1893 the Copelands began suits to compel Bruning to make restitution to his wronged sister. Do you suppose they would have ever gotten back one dollar of those ill-gotten gains if they had not brought suits? They have baffled and dallied until this woman's soul has worn out with anxiety. He has the property and she has lines in her face and heartache and a husband who is in trouble. This husband began to realize what the situation was and brooded over it until he became insane on that subject. We will show you by the best witnesses that ever walked the earth that this man was demented on that one subject. We will show you that in 1892 he suffered with a disease known as cerebral hyperemia, a rushing of blood to his head.

He only suffered from this ailment when the subject of his wife's wrongs were mentioned to him. Then the blood would go charging to his head, his veins would throb and beat and his brain would be on fire. On the morning of April 17, 1891, he boarded the train to come to this city. His purpose was to see Addison C. Harris and find out why the suits against Bruning were de-layed. Gentlemen of the jury, that morn-shame of manhood, I have to say it, she confessed then that this double-dyed villain, when she was a mere child, did attempt and was successful in dishonoring her. It was with that confession ringing in his ears that Copeland came to this city with wild thoughts in his mind. Gentlemen, do you wonder at it? We will show you by witnesses that Copeland came to this city witnesses. by witneses that he acted like a crazy man; we will show that he came here and did the shooting such as the State has described; but that he was suffering from a disease known as temporary frenzy—not emotional insanity, but a disease recognized and welldefined by the medical profession. He did hate his brother-in-law, but it was the hatred of insanity and the doctors will tell you that with the blood surging from heart to brain a man cannot always control himself. This man, with his course of villalny -first robbing his sister of her honor and then of her property-had so operated upon her husband's mind that he was not accountable for the tragic event of April 17." Addison C. Harris, who carries a shat-tered bone in his left arm as a result of opeland's bad aim, testified yesterday for the State. Mr. Harris gave an accurate "I went over to the office of Miller, Winter & Elam with Copeland," said the witness, "shortly after noon. I walked into Mr. Winter's room, Copeland a few steps behind me. Mr. Winter was at his desk, Judge Corbaley was near by, and Mr. Bruning was sitting in a low chair at the southeast corner of the room. I shook hands with Mr. Bruning and stepped a few feet away from him. As I did so I saw the glint of a pistol barrel two feet from my face. Instantly there was a report. Whether Copeland advanced as I retired I don't know, but before he fired again I caught him about the body. While we were struggling some one pushed a chair against him in a fending manner. Copeland is a strong man, and was able to fire two more shots while he was in my arms. In the struggle I fell to the floor. I am left-handed, and when I undertook to lift myself I could not. I saw I was wounded in the arm. Next I saw Copeland striking at Bruning with a pistol, but don't know whether he hit him or not. My recollection is that after I got into the north room I heard another report of a pistol. Mr. Miller came running in and caught Copeland in his arms. Mr. Winter tried to take the pistol, but could not, and a terrific struggle followed. Later I saw Copeland lying on the floor. and some one came up and took the pistol from him. I should say that when the first shot was fired Bruning was sitting down." On cross-examination Mr. Harris admitted that he and Copeland went to Miller, Winter & Elam's office at his own suggestion. He did not know that Bruning was there. When Copeland was on the floor his face did not have its usual expression. It was very red, and his features betrayed intense smotion or anger, and his eyes were wide open and appeared to be set or staring. W. H. H. Miller and Ferd Winter gave versions of the shooting similar to that detailed by attorney Harris. This morning

Divorce Case Defendant Charged with Various Odd Capers. Clarinda Synder yesteraay filed a complaint for divorce from George R. Snyder, whom she married in 1800. She charges the defendant with a number of specific acts of cruelty. Snyder is the plaintiff's second husband. By a former marriage she had a child, a boy, who seems to have been the innocent cause of all the trouble. Mrs. Snyder had property in Haughville in her own name and took her husband to live there. Snyder objected to her child, and was in the habit of calling him "lazy"

When he was sick with rheumatism the plaintiff says his stepfather threatened to throw him out of the house. However, he failed to carry out the threat and amused himself by throwing water on the fire and filling the house with soot and water. Another favorite diversion was to turn the damper of the stove so that the smoke would pour into the room. Finally he accused the plaintiff of getting drunk. She wants a decree of divorce, an order re-straining the defendant from molesting her,

GOODS NOT IN THE STATE.

Case Where a Peddler Was Fined Reversed by Judge Carter. John Bardsley was arrested and fined the Police Court for peddling without a license. He appealed to the Circuit Court and the case was tried several days ago. Yesterday Acting Judge Carter announced his decision. He said he would be compelled to reverse the lower court because of a decision of the Supreme Court which covered the case. The supreme body has said that an ordinance passed by a municipality that fines a man for selling goods that are not in the State is void. An ordinance of this character would interfere with the interstate-commerce law. It was shown that .Bardsley was not peddling goods, but was taking orders for a rug installment house, hence his case was within the soppe of the Supreme Court's decision.

The suit of Ralph St. John Perry against George L. Knox, proprietor of the Freeman, is being tried in the Circuit Court. Mr. Perry was formerly an African missionary, and when he returned from the dark con-tinent he made a contract with the Freeman to contribute letters. They were not published, and Perry brought suit for $150. Payment is being resisted on the ground that the letters were not copyrighted.

The suit of the Cabinet Makers' Union against the city of Indianapolis, to recover $10,000 damages growing out of the overflow of Pogue's run in 1883, was dismissed by Judge McMaster, of the Superior Court, yes-terday. The case was thrown out on the motion of the city attorney, who averred that it had not been diligently prosecuted. This dismissal will affect twelve similar suits pending in the Superior Court.

Judge Bartholomew yesterday sent George Meixner to jail for thirty days and fined him $5 for contempt. Recently he was ordered by the court to pay a certain sum toward the support of his wife and failed to do so. It was shown in evidence that he used some very ungracious language in referring to the court's order. An Amended Complaint Filed.

HOTTEST DAY ON RECORD.

Thermometer Recorded 93.4 Degrees Yesterday-Cause of the Hot Spell.

Those persons who were constantly reminded of the heat yesterday with the greeting "Is it hot enough for you?" which came from every friend who was met on the street, might have been made even yet more miserable had they been apprised of the fact that the mercury in the thermometer was at a higher mark than it had ever been before in the month of May, The maximum temperature as recorded at the weather bureau was 93.4 degrees, while the minimum was 65 degrees. That marks the hottest May day of which there is any record, the next warmest day having been the 26th of May, 1879, when the temper-ature reached 92 degrees. C. F. R. Wap-penhans, local forecast official of the weather bureau, accounts for the extremely barometric areas known as storms to move. These should have an castward movement, but for some reason they have become stationary between the Rocky mountains and the Mississippi river, and as a consequence the hot currents which have reached this region from the South are not forced to move by the storms, and the weather becomes excessively warm. The forecast for to-day calls for local rains, which may perhaps be thunder showers. Mr. Wappenhans says it is almost impossible to make a forecast of the weather, so long as the storms are stationary, as it is difficult to do so when there is nothing upon which to work.

MONUMENT REGENTS ACCEPT.

Appointing Board's Correspondence-Major Wildman Offered a Position.

The new monument regents appointed by fled Governor Matthews of their acceptance. It seems that the board learned before making the appointments known that the men appointed would accept. The board, in its endeavors to make the appointments has done a great deal of corresponding and consulted the different "possibilities." One of these possibilities seems to have been Maj. John Wildman, of Muncie, editor of the Muncie Times. An issue of that paper of a recent date contains a letter from Se retary of State Owen, in which Major Wildman is tendered a position on the board of regents. In the letter Mr. Owen says that Major Wildman was a unanimous choice of the appointing board, but notwithstanding the Major saw fit to decline the honor.
